Optical Bistability As Neural Network Nonlinear Activation Function

Davide Bazzanella

20 March 2018

Università degli studi di Trento

Introduction

Introduction

What is an optical buffer?

In telecommunications and computing, a buffer is a storage medium that keeps data for a certain time. Data are usually stored in a very temporary way.

An optical buffer is a device that is capable of temporarily storing data that was transmitted optically, without converting it to the electrical domain.